FEDERAL PADLOCK LAW TO BE UTILIZED

DISTRICT ATTORNEY MAU TO CRUSH BOOTLEGGERS

Is Now Preparing List, Twenty-five in Columbus Alone, and Half a Hundred Will Be Sought in Different Towns Around the Capital City.

Request for the application of the padlock law to approximately 25 Columbus places will be made by United States District Attorney Haveth Mau, he declared in an announcement Tuesday, in which he stated a special drive to clean up this federal district will be instituted following the disposition of the present cases returned by the federal grand jury.

There will be approximately fifty padlock warrants asked for in this district, which takes in 28 counties of the southwest division. The places to be padlocked are in Columbus, Steubenville, Bellaire, Portsmouth, Ironton, Athens, and other principal cities of the division.

"Application for padlock will be made in very case that comes into court hereafter," District Attorney Mau said Tuesday.

"A drive to clean up this division and district will be made following the disposal of the cases made by the federal grand jury of next week," he stated.

The district attorney's office is now preparing a list of the places for be filed. This list is expected to be which an application for padlock will finished the latter part of the week and action started at that time.

"Every bootlegger who comes into this court from now on for a third offense, in conjunction with the drive to clean up this district, will be charged with felony, which brings a penitentiary sentence," he also declared.

In a case of application of the padlock law a place may be closed for the maximum time of one year or a bond of $1000 levied, the action in the case being discretionary with the judge.

THE WILLING WORKERS OF WASHINGTON

The Willing Workers Sewing club of Washington township school met at the home of our leader, Mrs. C. E. Meyers, on June 2. The meeting was called to order by the President Miss Priscilla Trimmer. The roll was called and two members were absent. It was decided to have the next meeting at the Washington township school building on June 23. After the business part there was a demonstration given by Miss Priscilla Trimmer on the different kinds of collars one should wear. Afterward a nice lunch was served and there was an entertainment of music. The girls of the club sang songs. They are getting along nicely with their club work. They are working hard to win a seal for 1925. All enjoy the work very much.

CLOTHING CLUB

The Pickaway Township Clothing club held its third meeting at the school building Friday afternoon, May 12, with 12 members present. One member in order to be there made the trip on horseback.

In the work hour, the club learned how to measure themselves for the club aprons. Two aprons were cut out as demonstrations.

BANDIT TAKES ALL MONEY AT OIL STATION

Clarence Wolf is Victim of Second Holdup—Thief Made Good Getaway.

Clarence Wolf, in charge of the Columbus Oil company filling station, corner of Main and Washington streets was held up about nine o'clock Tuesday evening and all the money on hand at the time was taken.

The bandit walked into the station quite unconcerned and pointed a gun at Mr. Wolf's head and coldly said, "I want your money." Mr. Wolf complied turning over $29.18. The bandit then just as nonchalantly walked out crossed Main street and went to his auto. Ford coupe, and rode away going north on Washington street to Watt, and then into the Lancaster pike and left the city.

L. F. Smithhisler, who was on his way home, passed the car as it turned into Watt street and the machine was going at top speed. Evidently, said Mr. Wolf, two or more men were concerned in the holdup, as the engine of the car was started before the first bandit got to the car. Mr. Wolf, who had a small gun, fired a half dozen shots after the bandit, but none reached their mark.

This is Mr. Wolf's second experience in four months. He was held up once before at the same station, and was relieved of $11.18.

The company will not be a loser by Tuesday night's holdup, as the company carries a blanket bandit policy, covering all their oil filling stations.

Gotham Push Carts Do Big Yearly Business

Washington.—The 7,800 push cart peddlers in New York city do an annual business of approximately $35,000,000 and supply about 1,500,000 persons with fruits, vegetables, dried fruits, nuts and cheese.

Department of Agriculture investigators co-operating with the port of New York, in a study of the situation, found that 90 per cent of the peddlers were foreign born and that the business included 200 commodities, "from apples to umbrellas."

A report by a department expert says the weekly sales ranged from $126 for the fruit vendors to $75 for the general merchandise handlers.

"Tiger's" Grandson Sells Automobiles

Seattle.—Georges Gatteau, grandson of Georges Clemenceau, the Tiger of France, is an automobile salesman in Seattle. He is a son of Andre and Therese Clemenceau Gatteau.

Gatteau was personal secretary to his grandfather, the "tiger" of France, until he joined the French army in 1915. He served in many major engagements near Verdun.

After the war, Gatteau narrated, he spent an inheritance of more than 1,000,000 francs in gambling resorts in western and southern Europe. When his money was gone he worked his way to Singapore, back to Paris, to New Orleans, Boston, Central and South America and Seattle. Here he has taken out first papers to become an American citizen.

KILLED WHEN HIS MACHINE OVERTURNED

James Lemay Met Instant Death on Darbyville Pike at Early Hour.

James Lemay was instantly killed this morning at two o'clock on the Darbyville pike at the foot of the hill near the home of his brother-in-law, William Brown, who occupies the John J. Renick farm.

His remains were found cold in the embrace of death by Jacob Lowery, a laborer on the farm, who heard the crash which woke him from a deep sleep. Mr. Lowery lives in a housecar beside the road. He went to the scene of the wreck and found the dead man pinned under the overturned car, with the steering wheel resting on his body. His head and shoulder were crushed and life was extinct as he was killed almost instantly.

Mr. Lemay drove a Maxwell touring car and had attended a meeting of the Scioto Valley grange Tuesday evening. He was one of the officers and after the ceremonies he took home a young lady, Miss Gladys Willoughby, to her home in Derby, and it was on his return to his sister's home that he met his death. His sister, Mrs. Brown, thought that he may have dozed on his way home and the car came down the hill uncontrolled.

Coroner Danton was called and viewed the remains. He says the car evidently turned a complete summersault off the culvert, down a sheer declivity of some nine feet.

The deceased was nearly 34 years of age and was a farmer by occupation.

He was a son of the late Lewis and Mary Lemay and is survived by three sisters and three brothers. They are Charles, Benjamin and George Lemay of Jackson township; Anna, wife of N. F. Reid, of Circleville township; Stella, wife of Charles Rihl and Elizabeth, wife of William Brown, of Jackson township.

The funeral services will be held Friday. The time and place has not been arranged.

Dwight Weiler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira B. Weiler of this city, gave a splendid account of his musicianship when he took part in a violin recital presented at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, recently, by the pupils from the class of Robert Perutz, artist faculty member.

Mr. Weiler played with unusual skill "Sonata, G minor" by Tartini.

Eclipse Led to Discovery of New Gas

Middletown, Conn.—A new gas has been discovered by scientists as a result of the observations made during the recent total eclipse of the sun, according to Professor Frederick Slocum, head of the Van Vleck observatory at Wesleyan university.

Professor Slocum says that the only time the scientists can study the gases about the sun is when the sun is in total eclipse. In January their brief observations determined that there is a gas there whose presence they had not recognized before.

Professor Slocum said scientists are not prepared as yet to name the gas or to discuss its probable properties.

EASTERN STAR ENTERTAINERS OF ASHVILLE

Playlet, Readings and Music in Masonic Temple on Tuesday Evening.

A most delightful time was had Tuesday evening at the meeting of Circleville chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, when following the business session, the Ashville contingent furnished a most excellent entertainment of music, readings, play acting and refreshments.

The farce comedy which came near being a tragedy, "What Became of the False Teeth," was put on by four accomplished players whose arduous toil for many weeks was evidenced by the ease and fluency, with which they staged this difficult production and its complete success was attested by the hearty laughs it provoked by the large assembly of hearers.

The cast of characters was; Mr. Jackson, Mrs. J. M. Chandler; Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Thomas Accord; Dr. Price, Mrs. J. M. Borror; Aunt Mandy Mrs. Joseph S. Roof.

Following the play, Miss Eleanor Hegans, the talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hegans, of Columbus, rendered a program of readings, singing and dancing, and this was thoroughly enjoyed by all. In the musical part of the program, her mother was the piano accompanist.

The opening number was "How Do You Do?" Two Irish impersonations were given; "Invy" and "At the Top." Then came the popular musical numbers; "I Don't Want to Get Married" and "Sob Sister Sadie;" Beau Brummel novelty numbers, "The Forgotten Word" and "Red Headed Mamma;" Humorous recitations; "History," "The Overworked Electionist" and "Home Town" were given and this was followed by the closing number, "Home, Sweet Home."

Miss Hegans is a young woman of unusual ability and many pleasing compliments on her entertainment were given by those who were fortunate enough to have the privilege of hearing her.

The program was interspersed with music by the following; Mrs. R. S. Hosler, vocal solo, accompanied by Miss Elizabeth Hedges, and piano solos by Miss Maxine Accord, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Accord. These were thoroughly enjoyed by all and the Circleville folks were unanimous in saying that the Ashville division are royal entertainers and are hoping they may in the near future give another program.

Last, but not least, was the refreshments consisting of ice cream, strawberries, cake and ice tea, also furnished by the Ashville crowd. Fully one hundred persons were present and all had a most delightful time.

Greatest Frost Risk to Fruit

Most of Harm Usually Occurs in Early Stages of Growth in Spring.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In discussing the weather risk in fruit growing in the United States
before the American Meteorological society recently a member of the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture explained that it is relatively greater than for most other crops because of low winter temperatures damaging twigs or buds, or spring frosts killing advanced buds or blooms. The type of winter injury in the North differs from that in the South.

Greatest Harm Early.

While winter injury is important in deciduous fruit, the greatest harm usually occurs in the early stages of growth, to the blossoms or young fruit
just set. At the same time it may happen that there is a range of several degrees between the temperature at which all the buds or blossoms on
a tree will be killed and that at which,
because of favorable location or different stages of development, a good many will escape. Because of this orchardists often overestimate the amount of damage after a spring
frost at blooming time.

The low-temperature danger point
for fruit blossoms or for fruit just set ranges from 27 to 29 degrees, with very slight variations. It is somewhat higher for apricots, plums and prunes.
Well-developed buds will withstand a lower temperature than after they have opened, due to the subcooling of their capillary liquids. This type of cooling without forming ice is due largely to the presence of chemical substances held in solution.

Cause of Frost Risk.

The principal cause of the greater frost risk to fruit than to other agricultural products is man's inability to control the vegetative periods in the spring. Planting can be delayed for most other crops until frost risk is
very slight or entirely eliminated.
There is very little margin, in the case of fruit, between the date of the last killing frost in spring and the blooming dates. In Ohio during 40 per cent of the years in a long period
studied freezing weather occurred
after the fruit trees were in full bloom. As it is impossible to hold back the development of the blossoms
in any way, there is apparently no remedy for this difficulty. There may be heavier winter injury in the central northern states than elsewhere,
but earliness and lateness of blooming in relation to the time of last killing spring frost is substantially the same in all sections and at different elevations. Local variations in topography, however, may give one orchard
a distinct advantage over another.
Where alternating slopes and depressions occur the lower ground should not be used for orchards, as it will usually have the lower temperatures.
Unfortunately many orchards in this country have been planted without regard to local topography, and to this is partly due the heavy frost damage
from time to time.

Air-Slaked Lime Dusting Will Discourage Slugs

A dusting of air-slaked lime around the plants will discourage slugs or snails; they will not crawl over it.
Many may be trapped by laying cabbage or lettuce leaves on the ground in the evening; in the morning they will be found under these leaves, and may be destroyed.

These molluscs are often a nuisance in cold frames, hotbeds and cellars, as well as in greenhouses. To control them the United States Department of Agriculture advises to remove all decaying boards or debris, and then apply air-slaked lime, finely pulverized salt or road dust liberally. Of course, salt could not be used on plant beds, but beds of cuttings or seedlings may be protected by putting a border of salt, soot or dry lime around them.
Dry lime or salt will be found desirable in a cellar where the slugs or snails appear. They can also be poisoned with a bait of boiled potatoes or sweet potatoes sprinkled with white arsenic or paris green. Drenching the soil with a solution of mercuric chlo-ride (corrosive sublimate), one-half ounce to the gallon of water, will destroy slugs, snails, earthworms, and the larvae of various soil insects, but this must be handled with great care, as it is a deadly poison. As the bi-chloride corrodes metals, it should be prepared in a glass or glazed vessel.

Different Crops Need Fertilizing Formulas

It is impossible to lay down definite fertilizing formulas for different crops because of the extremely wide variation in soils. Generally speaking, for barley on a sandy soil, a 2-12-4 mixture is recommended, if the ground has not had legumes grown regularly nor manure applied. Where corn crops have been hogged down a great deal of manure has been returned to the soil which is supplying a large amount of potash and nitrogen. However, the corn crop used a great deal of these plant foods, especially the nitrogen and it is not advisable to reduce the amount of nitrogen recommended in the 2-12-4 formula. From 200 to 400 pounds per acre is the amount usually recommended for soils that are in fairly good condition. Between 250 and 300 pounds per acre should be sufficient.

Here Is the Tool That Completes the Fordson Farming Cycle

FOR many years the tractor has performed satisfactorily with plow, harrow, drill and belt-driven tools. But, how to utilize Fordson power in cultivating corn has been a problem.
That vacancy in the cycle which would otherwise be complete has now been filled by the Amsco Two-row Cultivator.

With this machine, the Fordson cultivates thoroughly from the first cultivation to the last.
This new machine has accomplished remarkable results. It marks the end of monotonous cultivating behind slow plodding teams.

The construction of this machine is simplicity itself. No unnecessary parts. No unnecessary friction. The cultivator is light running and easy to handle.

This is the last word in Standard Fordson
Equipment, and every farmer in this commu-

Greatest Frost Risk to Fruit

Most of Harm Usually Occurs in Early Stages of Growth in Spring.

(Prepared by the United States Department
of Agriculture.)

In discussing the weather risk in
fruit growing in the United States
before the American Meteorological
society recently a member of the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture explained
that it is relatively greater than for
most other crops because of low winter temperatures damaging twigs or
buds, or spring frosts killing advanced
buds or blooms. The type of winter injury in the North differs from that
in the South.

Greatest Harm Early.

While winter injury is important in deciduous fruit, the greatest harm
usually occurs in the early stages of growth, to the blossoms or young fruit
just set. At the same time it may happen that there is a range of several degrees between the temperature
at which all the buds or blossoms on
a tree will be killed and that at which,
because of favorable location or different stages of development, a good many will escape. Because of this orchardists often overestimate the
amount of damage after a spring
frost at blooming time.

The low-temperature danger point
for fruit blossoms or for fruit just set ranges from 27 to 29 degrees, with very slight variations. It is somewhat higher for apricots, plums and prunes.
Well-developed buds will withstand a lower temperature than after they
have opened, due to the subcooling of their capillary liquids. This type of cooling without forming ice is due
largely to the presence of chemical substances held in solution.

Cause of Frost Risk.

The principal cause of the greater
frost risk to fruit than to other agricultural products is man's inability to control the vegetative periods in the spring. Planting can be delayed for most other crops until frost risk is
very slight or entirely eliminated.
There is very little margin, in the
case of fruit, between the date of the last killing frost in spring and the blooming dates. In Ohio during 40 per cent of the years in a long period
studied freezing weather occurred
after the fruit trees were in full bloom. As it is impossible to hold back the development of the blossoms
in any way, there is apparently no
remedy for this difficulty. There may be heavier winter injury in the central northern states than elsewhere,
but earliness and lateness of blooming in relation to the time of last killing spring frost is substantially the
same in all sections and at different elevations. Local variations in topography, however, may give one orchard
a distinct advantage over another.
Where alternating slopes and depressions occur the lower ground should
not be used for orchards, as it will usually have the lower temperatures.
Unfortunately many orchards in this
country have been planted without regard to local topography, and to this
is partly due the heavy frost damage

$3,688,873 EXPENDED FOR WAR-TORN AREA

Committee for Devastated France Reports.

Washington.—The final report of the activities of the American Committee for Devastated France, Inc., covering the period from its establishment on April 1, 1918, to the formal ending of its work in the war-torn areas of France on March 31, 1924, has just been issued. The report disclosed that the committee received a total of $4,813,749 in cash and supplies and of this sum 76.85 per cent, or $3,688,873, was sent to France, or spent in the United States for the benefit of France.

In making public the report, Rouget D. Jenkins, executive vice president of the committee, said that the principal services developed in France by the committee had been taken over by French committees. This step was in line with the original policy of the organization, which sought to reduce to a minimum the after-waste of war and insure the continued effectiveness of the work. Miss Anne Morgan, chairman of the executive committee of the organization, wrote a foreword to the report.

"The American Committee for Devastated France," she said, "has completed its work. Its records show a total of more than $4,000,000 received and disbursed. The committee regarded itself always as a trustee, responsible to its donors and friends. To them it now presents this summarized statement of its activities. To the thousands who gave so generously of their means, their time and their thought in order that its purposes might be realized, the committee extends its deep gratitude."

Established Forty-Five Canteens.
Even before the organization applied itself to the civilian problems of the war zone it was called upon to aid the military forces. In this work 45 canteens were established, and more than 360,000 American and French soldiers were served, and, in addition, six women doctors and ten nurses went into service in emergency hospitals.

"In retrospect," said the report, "the committee's program appears to have been planned at the outset and carried through to the end. Actually, it was forged on the anvil of demand. The type of service changed constantly with the succeeding needs of the people. The first task was emergency relief—to provide places to sleep, food and clothing, to care for the children, to restore the soil to production. Then came a need for public health measures, hygiene, physical education, agricultural aid, libraries, schools—a service to meet the barest physical and spiritual necessities of a people who were taking up life anew in a region ruined by war."

The report disclosed that the sum of $204,741 was spent for educational and children's work, and that $87,590 was expended in agriculture. For public health and nursing the sum of $11,670 was used, while in the rehabilitation and relief of villages $28,958 was employed. The committee spent $26,279 in the purchase of food from the American army, and $3,000 for church bells. Discussing the chief services which the committee established and maintained, the report said:

"Transportation—In a territory where all normal means of transportation had been destroyed or disrupted the whole service of the committee was dependent on its own transportation system. In order to accomplish this, 63 camions and camionettes and a repair shop were maintained.

"Construction—Obviously there was an immediate need for building and repairs. Sawmill, carpenters' and joiners' shops were established at Blerancourt, and employed an average of 175 workmen; prisoners of war first, and then needy refugees. In addition, repairs to buildings were made and furniture manufactured for schools and libraries. The staff also took on private work at the rate of 300,000 francs a month, the profits going to civilian relief. The business thus established was finally sold to a contracting firm and the money obtained was turned into the promotion of the public health service."

Furnished Farm Implements.
In the way of agricultural aid the committee furnished farm implements, live stock, vegetables and seeds, distributing them below cost. Abandoned farms were worked and syndicate and farmers' co-operatives were organized. Fifty-two tractors were used in showing the farmers of the Alsine more progressive methods, and wheat from 125,000 acres was thrashed at three central points. Under the auspices of the ministers of agriculture and of education demonstrations in American methods of canning fruits and vegetables were carried on for four years in 36 French departments, including more than 100 domestic science and normal schools.

"The infant mortality," said the report, "in the committee's region was reduced to 24 per 1,000, less than 2.5 per cent. The infant mortality in the entire Department of the Alsine was 87 per 1,000, and as a comparative figure the rate for New York city in 1924, which was 6.8 per cent, might be cited."

Chic Wide Brimmed Hat; Straw and Velvet Used

This broad brimmed hat in tan straw is one of the early summer millinery modes. Orange velvet trimming gives just the right note of color, and harmonizes well with the rough finished straw.

Embroidery Is Offered in Various Materials

Many attractive, decorative notes are used for both tunics and two-piece costumes. Embroidery is given considerable prominence on plain materials.

Prints are featured for tunics, and two-piece costumes. The print may be used for the entire costume, that is, the overblouse and skirt with a touch of solid color to relieve the brilliancy of the pattern. Other fashions use the print for the overblouse, with the skirt in a plain color that harmonizes with one of the colors in the design. A band of the novelty fabric finishes the skirt.

Embroidery is offered in various materials from coarse, bright woolen yarns to outlining prints with beads. Attractive two-piece sports costumes sponsor gay wool embroidery worked out in bayadere striping. White and light shades in crepe de chine are favored for the groundwork.

Wool embroidery has quite a different appearance when worked out in dainty garlands and used in border treatment, or possibly worked into a motif around a pocket.

Less colorful but richer is embroidery in silk and metal threads, following in some instances elaborate Chinese designs. In gold thread with touches of color. Closely allied with the embroidery is the use of applique combined with gold thread.

Embroidery generally is introduced in wide border treatment which sometimes extends some way up the front of a tunic except in the case of the jumper costumes which sponsor this form of decoration for the whole of the overblouse. Tunics also feature all-over embroidery in a small pattern in self-colored silks.

The peasant influence is noted among certain necklines which favor the rather high snugly fitting type. Some of these are convertible, somewhat similar to the Chanel collar. For the blouse that is devoid of a collar, the introduction of a scarf, finished with a long fringe, gives a graceful effect.

Newest Blouses Long; Sometimes Embroidered

The newest blouses are often long, particularly if they are to be worn with three-quarter or long coats. Sometimes they are embroidered, but buttons and jabots are a more frequent form of decoration. Some have two color bands at the neck and wrists and also outlining any pockets that may exist.

Several tiers of little plaited fan-shaped tabs down the front elaborate some of the shorter blouses. Others have a trimming of grosgrain ribbon to match the crepe de chine or jersey of which the blouse is made. Low standing curate collars are frequent, and the fastening is often at the side instead of at the center front.

The jumper-dress—often employed as the base of the ensemble—shows no signs of waning popularity in Paris. The couturiers all showed more elaborate models at the openings in the hope of winning women back to what is reminiscently called the old traditions of the French couture. Milady, however, found that the jumper-dress was decidedly preferable and so the final judgment of Paris favors this type of frock for spring.

Smart Disorder May Be to Milady's Advantage

Once during early Victorian days charming negligence was the fashion. The effect of too great precision in dress was not admired. A stray curl, a loosened girdle ribbon were quite a la mode. The tendency extended to the realm of men's attire. Young men copied the studied negligence of Lord Byron and went with neckties just a little askew and waistcoats partly unbuttoned. You have but to search through old family portraits of the 1830 period to see how this worked out.

It may possibly be that we are coming back to a period of charming and intentional negligence. At any rate, it is said that in Paris some of the smartest of hairdressers are advocating an effect of slightly disordered curls as a rival for the perfectly sleek, straight coiffure that has remained in style for so long. Whether you like it or not, you will have to grant that it is younger-looking for most women.

Experience Valuable.

It is as much waste to take bread out of the oven too soon as it is to allow it to remain there too long. Prevention of waste requires the exercise of judgment which is gained only through experience. This is why experience is a valuable asset.

The Plighted Word.

The heaviest fetter that ever weighed down the limbs of a captive is as the web of the gossamer compared with the pledge of people of honor. The wall of stone and the bar of iron may be broken, but the plighted word, never.

English Woman's Fool Fad.

Toys to play with, and a special little house for each dog, are included in the luxuries given to her Pekinese dogs by one London society woman who believes in bringing up her pets to act like children.

The First Combs.

The ancients used combs to arrange their hair, the Greek and Roman combs being of boxwood, and the Egyptian of ivory. They were part of the early ritual of the church, and later were used as ornaments.

Life's Never-Ending Struggle.

As there is much beast and some devil in man, so is there some angel and some God in him. The beast and the devil may be conquered, but in this life never wholly destroyed.—Coleridge

$3,688,873 EXPENDED FOR WAR-TORN AREA

Committee for Devastated France Reports.

Washington.—The final report of the activities of the American Committee for Devastated France, Inc., covering the period from its establishment on April 1, 1918, to the formal ending of its work in the war-torn areas of France on March 31, 1924, has just been issued. The report disclosed that the committee received a total of $4,813,749 in cash and supplies and of this sum 76.85 per cent, or $3,688,873, was sent to France, or spent in the United States for the benefit of France.

In making public the report, Rouget D. Jenkins, executive vice president of the committee, said that the principal services developed in France by the committee had been taken over by French committees. This step was in line with the original policy of the organization, which sought to reduce to a minimum the after-waste of war and insure the continued effectiveness of the work. Miss Anne Morgan, chairman of the executive committee of the organization, wrote a foreword to the report.

"The American Committee for Devastated France," she said, "has completed its work. Its records show a total of more than $4,000,000 received and disbursed. The committee regarded itself always as a trustee, responsible to its donors and friends. To them it now presents this summarized statement of its activities. To the thousands who gave so generously of their means, their time and their thought in order that its purposes might be realized, the committee extends its deep gratitude."

Established Forty-Five Canteens.

Even before the organization applied itself to the civilian problems of the war zone it was called upon to aid the military forces. In this work 45 canteens were established, and more than 300,000 American and French soldiers were served, and, in addition, six women doctors and ten nurses went into service in emergency hospitals.

"In retrospect," said the report, "the committee's program appears to have been planned at the outset and carried through to the end. Actually, it was forged on the anvil of demand. The type of service changed constantly with the succeeding needs of the people. The first task was emergency relief—to provide places to sleep, food and clothing, to care for the children, to restore the soil to production. Then came a need for public health measures, hygiene, physical education, agricultural aid, libraries, schools—a service to meet the barest physical and spiritual necessities of a people who were taking up life anew in a region ruined by war."

The report disclosed that the sum of $204,741 was spent for educational and children's work, and that $87,390 was expended in agriculture. For public health and nursing the sum of $11,070 was used, while in the rehabilitation and relief of villages $28,958 was employed. The committee spent $26,279 in the purchase of food from the American army, and $3,000 for church bells. Discussing the chief services which the committee established and maintained, the report said:

"Transportation—In a territory where all normal means of transportation had been destroyed or disrupted the whole service of the committee was dependent on its own transportation system. In order to accomplish this, 63 camions and camionettes and a repair shop were maintained.

"Construction—Obviously there was an immediate need for building and repairs. Sawmills, carpenters' and joiners' shops were established at Blancourt, and employed an average of 175 workmen; prisoners of war first, and then needy refugees. In addition, repairs to buildings were made and furniture manufactured for schools and libraries. The staff also took on private work at the rate of 300,000 francs a month, the profits going to civilian relief. The business thus established was finally sold to a contracting firm and the money obtained was turned into the promotion of the public health service."

Furnished Farm Implements.

In the way of agricultural aid the committee furnished farm implements, live stock, vegetables and seeds, distributing them below cost. Abandoned farms were worked and syndicate and farmers' co-operatives were organized. Fifty-two tractors were used in showing the farmers of the Alsine more progressive methods, and wheat from 125,000 acres was thrashed at three central points. Under the auspices of the ministers of agriculture and of education demonstrations in American methods of canning fruits and vegetables were carried on for four years in 36 French departments, including more than 100 domestic science and normal schools.

"The infant mortality," said the report, "in the committee's region was reduced to 24 per 1,000, less than 2.5 per cent. The infant mortality in the entire Department of the Alsine was 87 per 1,000, and as a comparative figure the rate for New York city in 1924, which was 6.8 per cent, might be cited."

Chic Wide Brimmed Hat; Straw and Velvet Used

This broad brimmed hat in tan straw is one of the early summer millinery modes. Orange velvet trimming gives just the right note of color, and harmonizes well with the rough finished straw.

Embroidery Is Offered in Various Materials

Many attractive, decorative notes are used for both tunics and two-piece costumes. Embroidery is given considerable prominence on plain materials.

Prints are featured for tunics, and two-piece costumes. The print may be used for the entire costume, that is, the overblouse and skirt with a touch of solid color to relieve the brilliancy of the pattern. Other fashions use the print for the overblouse, with the skirt in a plain color that harmonizes with one of the colors in the design. A band of the novelty fabric finishes the skirt.

Embroidery is offered in various materials from coarse, bright woolen yarns to outlining prints with beads. Attractive two-piece sports costumes sponsor gay wool embroidery worked out in bayadere striping. White and light shades in crepe de chine are favored for the groundwork.

Wool embroidery has quite a different appearance when worked out in dainty garlands and used in border treatment, or possibly worked into a motif around a pocket.

Less colorful but richer is embroidery in silk and metal threads, following in some instances elaborate Chinese designs, in gold thread with touches of color. Closely allied with the embroidery is the use of applique combined with gold thread.

Embroidery generally is introduced in wide border treatment which sometimes extends some way up the front of a tunic except in the case of the jumper costumes which sponsor this form of decoration for the whole of the overblouse. Tunics also feature all-over embroidery in a small pattern in self-colored silks.

The peasant influence is noted among certain necklines which favor the rather high snugly fitting type. Some of these are convertible, somewhat similar to the Chanel collar. For the blouse that is devoid of a collar, the introduction of a scarf, finished with a long fringe, gives a graceful effect.

Newest Blouses Long; Sometimes Embroidered

The newest blouses are often long, particularly if they are to be worn with three-quarter or long coats. Sometimes they are embroidered, but buttons and jabots are a more frequent form of decoration. Some have two color bands at the neck and wrists and also outlining any pockets that may exist.

Several tiers of little plaited fan-shaped tabs down the front elaborate some of the shorter blouses. Others have a trimming of grosgrain ribbon to match the crepe de chine or jersey of which the blouse is made. Low standing curate collars are frequent, and the fastening is often at the side instead of at the center front.

The jumper-dress—often employed as the base of the ensemble—shows no signs of waning popularity in Paris. The couturiers all showed more elaborate models at the openings in the hope of winning women back to what is reminiscently called the old traditions of the French couture. Milady, however, found that the jumper-dress was decidedly preferable and so the final judgment of Paris favors this type of frock for spring.

Smart Disorder May Be to Milady's Advantage

Once during early Victorian days charming negligence was the fashion. The effect of too great precision in dress was not admired. A stray curl, a loosened girdle ribbon were quite a la mode. The tendency extended to the realm of men's attire. Young men copied the studied negligence of Lord Byron and went with neckties just a little askew and waistcoats partly unbuttoned. You have but to search through old family portraits of the 1830 period to see how this worked out.

It may possibly be that we are coming back to a period of charming and intentional negligence. At any rate, it is said that in Paris some of the smartest of hairdressers are advocating an effect of slightly disordered curls as a rival for the perfectly sleek, straight coiffure that has remained in style for so long. Whether you like it or not, you will have to grant that it is younger-looking for most women.

Experience Valuable.

It is as much waste to take bread out of the oven too soon as it is to allow it to remain there too long. Prevention of waste requires the exercise of judgment which is gained only through experience. This is why experience is a valuable asset.

The Plighted Word.

The heaviest fetter that ever weighed down the limbs of a captive is as the web of the gossamer compared with the pledge of people of honor. The wall of stone and the bar of iron may be broken, but the plighted word, never.

English Woman's Fool Fad.

Toys to play with, and a special little house for each dog, are included in the luxuries given to her Pekinese dogs by one London society woman who believes in bringing up her pets to act like children.

The First Combs.

The ancients used combs to arrange their hair, the Greek and Roman combs being of boxwood, and the Egyptian of ivory. They were part of the early ritual of the church, and later were used as ornaments.

Life's Never-Ending Struggle.

THE WALLS OF
YOUR HOUSE

How To Treat Them Beautifully
and in a Style That Harmonizes
With the Architectural Design.

1. Wall-Treatments For Every Period.

A renaissance of rough-textured interior and exterior finishes for homes is seen in the present-day taste for stripped, two-toned and other hand-wrought wall surfaces. This rough-textured treatment, so popular now, goes back in time to ancient Greek and takes in the medieval Spanish, Italian, French and English styles of homes which are being adapted to residence-design in America today.

Just as the typical Spanish stucco-texture and interior plaster-work were heavy "palm finishes," and the representative plastering in the early English cottage was a sort of crude trowel-texture, so every great period of architecture and interior decoration developed its own effects in textured wall surfaces.

While these surfaces are not as strictly characteristic of the different types and periods as are, for example, certain types of roofs, windows and similar details, still, to be altogether correct, the house in one of these period styles should have walls of corresponding texture. It is only a little more unreasonable to find an American Colonial home with a Spanish patio than to finish a house in Italian design with a French Cottage stucco-texture.

Homes in which the wall-textures have corresponded with the design of the house have, until recently, been available only for the wealthy. For artisans who know these effects and how to produce them are few and their services expensive. But the present day use, in interior decoration, of plastic paints which produce both texture and tone, of colored stucco for exterior finishes, puts correct period wall-surfaces within the reach of home-builders with even the most modest purses.

Much of the charm of old villas and cottages in Europe comes from their rough-textured walls. By the use of modern materials, American homes can be made to have all the charm of these old world dwellings, and thus a higher artistic standard of home-building and decorating can be attained.

It is for this reason that rough-textured walls will become a permanent form of decoration and not just a mere fad. This series of articles aims, by describing the textures characteristic of the various periods and telling how they may be produced, to bring these finishes within the reach of the average home-builder as well as the wealthy.

This Teaches Us

President Coolidge, whose literary taste is excellent, said at a White House luncheon:

"I mistrust best sellers, the authors whose names are household words, and whose bank accounts never descend below four figures.

"Look at Poe and Whitman. They stand out above all their contemporaries today, yet Whitman lived in a little wooden shanty in Camden, while Poe lived in a little wooden shanty in Fordham, and they were both behind-hand with the rent.

"This teaches us that genius will out. Even during the genius' life it will out—at the elbows."

South African Diamonds

The production of diamonds in South Africa in 1922 was 2,053,095 metric karats, which was the largest since 1920 and comparable to that of any year since the immediate pre-war period, 1911 to 1913, when the yearly output surpassed 5,000,000 karats. The value in 1923 was estimated at $31,049,000. Outstanding features were the increase of alluvial compared with mine production and the development of more serious competition from foreign fields, especially those in the Belgian and Portuguese Congo.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

Mrs. McEwing Noggle has issued invitations to a luncheon Friday, June 12, followed by bridge.

Miss Margaret Weldon will entertain Thursday in honor of her guests, Miss Persis Wooster, of Cambridge Massachusetts, and Esther Van Allen, of Springfield, Massachusetts.

The spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Rader, of near Circleville, was thrown open Sunday to welcome sixty-four guests in honor of their twentieth wedding anniversary.

Summer roses waited their fragrance throughout the house. The honor table laid with twelve covers was a chef d'oeuvre in artistic decorating, centered by a five-branched, silver candelabra with tall yellow candles sentinelled by single silver candlesticks which also burned at the end of the table, linked to the candelabra with vines of myrtle. The table was further adorned with the bride's cake, adorned with a miniature bride and groom.

In the summer dining room were assembled the remaining fifty guests whose tables were a veritable copy of the honor table. A two course luncheon was served, carrying out the color scheme of yellow and white. The hand painted place cards, daffodils, were unique, bearing the date of their wedding, 1905, in gold letters, which were painted by Margaret Stonerock. Mr. and Mrs. Rader responded very graciously for the many beautiful gifts.

Those assisting in dispensing the hospitalities were Miss Flo List, Mrs. Will Rader, Miss Mary Connor, Mrs. George Shook, Mrs. John Renick, Mrs. James Summers, Mrs. Cleve Rader and Mrs. Earl Rader.

A number of relatives and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Hanley, near Tarleton, Sunday, June 7, to remind Mrs. Hanley's mother, Mrs. W. H. Grove, of her 76th birthday anniversary. All came with well filled baskets and enjoyed the day. In the afternoon ice cream and cake were served. Those present were Mrs. W. H. Grove, Hayesville; Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Grove, Ashville; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Grove and daughter, Helen Louise and son, George Richard, and Cleve Dumm, of Columbus; Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Dumm and sons, Woodrow and Grover and daughters, Mary, Marie and Elizabeth, of Nash; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wright and sons Lawrence and Julius, Hayesville; Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Frazier and son, Emmett of Ringgold; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Metzger of Columbus; Mr. and Mrs. Alva Hanley and sons, Edward and Ray, Mrs. Nell Welshimer, Tarleton; Helen Dumm, Mary Frazier, Mary Hanley, Mabel Dumm, Agnes Frazier, Hazel Dumm, Mattie Hanley, Ruth Wright, Marvin Dumm, Perry Hartruff, Harry Wright, Homer Hartruff, George Wright and Earl Hanley. The young people enjoyed the afternoon in the shady woods playing games. All left in the evening wishing Mrs. Grove many more happy birthday anniversaries.

New Variety of Apple

By a rare trick of nature there now exists a new variety of apple which has not been given a name. The new variety was accidentally discovered in New Jersey several years ago, when it was found that one tree bore two kinds of apples. The parent tree bears apples of mixed red and green stripes, while the new apple, developed on a single branch, is a deep dark red and has no stripes. Fruit experts studying the new apple declare it to be a most promising variety as well as a big boon to the fruit growers of America. Horticulturists term it the product of a "sport bud." A large nursery company purchased a single branch bearing the new fruit, paying the owner $5,000 for it. Buds from this branch are now being used to develop the new variety, and it is expected to become widely known as one of the leading apples.—Pathfinder Magazine.

New Use for Menthol

An all-American cold cure, based on home-grown menthol, is a possibility held out by the bureau of plant industry of the United States Department of Agriculture. Inasmuch as menthol is now imported at a cost of more than $1,000,000 annually, government botanists point out that menthol-bearing mint plants can be made a profitable crop if properly cultivated in regions where the climate is suitable. Experimental plantings in various parts of the United States in the last year have shown that the mint does not produce a high enough percentage of menthol in southern states, but in the cooler and moister northern states its culture can be made to pay.

Steel Grass Used for Springs.

CHILDREN BUILD AND RUN CITY

Used to Teach Pupils Art of Government.

Springfield, Mo.—"Tiny Town," the school children's city here, is on exhibition.

This Lilliputian city, built, run and governed by the city manager—commission form of government, and by the school children themselves, is receiving the attention of educators, business men and all interested in youth. It is not a facsimile of a modern city, but just Tiny Town. It is unlike any other city in the country.

Here in Tiny Town the children of Springfield are learning the duties of citizenship, and when they complete their work and future studies they will be able to take an intelligent interest in politics and government. The city's schools have used this plan, in an educational way, to teach the boys and girls how to govern.

Hazel Wilbert, fourteen years old and an orphan, is mayor of the pigmy city, and Gordon Cummings, fifteen, is the city manager. They were elected recently in a regular "political" campaign with 18 nominees for the office of city manager, mayor and municipal judge. William Newberry wears the star of chief of police of Tiny Town, while Naomi Sherwood sits on the bench as municipal judge. Following the election Hazel and Gordon went to Washington, called upon President Coolidge and invited him to attend the opening of Tiny Town to the public. The President took the matter under consideration.

On a plot of ground, 250 feet by 1,000 feet, in Grant Beach park, is located this town that belongs to the tots of Springfield. There is a community center with its city hall, high school library and chamber of commerce. The walks total 7,500 linear feet.

The blocks are large, enclosing spacious commons that represent play grounds, but which really are intended for working space, so that the repair and care of abutting properties may be carried on from the rear of each lot.

By day and by night faithful patrolmen guard Tiny Town, while a fire fighting brigade is always on watch.

During the 14 days that Tiny Town is on exhibition, there will be afternoon and night programs and concerts featured by the high school orchestra and the boy scout band of 300 pieces. The latter said to be the largest of its kind in the world. Preparations have been made for the entertainment of distinguished visitors.

Oakland, Cal.—A well-known California corporation has installed pigeon lofts at Stockton, Santa Cruz, San Jose, Santa Rosa, Fresno and Marysville and homing birds are to be used as message bearers. Hen Fruit Favorite
Victuals for Athletes

Berlin.—The age-old question as to whether a meat or vegetable diet is more beneficial for athletes came up for solution at the recent sport exhibition. The answer is still missing. In an exhaustive investigation active sportsmen insisted they could not get along on an exclusively vegetable diet and that their systems required fairly large quantities of meat. Eggs appeared to be the most popular article of food with a majority of athletes in training.

Barnhart Injured.

Columbus, June 9.—Andrew Miller, 65, Westerville, is dead and Charles Barnhart, 33, also of Westerville, is in a critical condition in Grant Hospital as a result of being struck by lightning when they took refuge under a large elm tree on the Winding Hollow golf course during yesterday afternoon's heavy rainstorm.

Both men were employed as ground keepers on the course. When the storm arose they fled to shelter beneath the tree. A few moments later the lightning struck. Miller was hit on the head and the terrific shock ripped his clothing almost from his body. He was killed instantly. Barnhart was unconscious when fellow workers, attracted by the crash, ran to their rescue.

An E. E. Fisher ambulance took Barnhart to Grant Hospital, while another ambulance of the same company removed the body of Miller to the mortuary of G. W. Stockdale at Westerville.

Barnhart was conscious only at intervals last night and little hope was held out for his recovery by Dr. Hugh Baldwin, who was in attendance.

Funeral arrangements for Miller had not been completed last night.

THE WALLS OF
YOUR HOUSE

How To Treat Them Beautifully
and in a Style That Harmonizes
With the Architectural Design.

1. Wall-Treatments For Every Period.

A renaissance of rough-textured interior and exterior finishes for homes is seen in the present-day taste for stripped, two-toned and other hand-wrought wall surfaces. This rough-textured treatment, so popular now, goes back in time to ancient Greek and takes in the mediaeval Spanish, Italian, French and English styles of homes which are being adapted to residence-design in America today.

Just as the typical Spanish stucco-texture and interior plaster-work were heavy "palm finishes," and the representative plastering in the early English cottage was a sort of crude trowel-texture, so every great period of architecture and interior decoration developed its own effects in textured wall surfaces.

While these surfaces are not as strictly characteristic of the different types and periods as are, for example, certain types of roofs, windows and similar details, still, to be altogether correct, the house in one of these period styles should have walls of corresponding texture. It is only a little more unreasonable to find an American Colonial home with a Spanish patio than to finish a house in Italian design with a French Cottage stucco-texture.

Homes in which the wall-textures have corresponded with the design of the house have, until recently, been available only for the wealthy. For artisans who know these effects and how to produce them are few and their services expensive. But the present day use, in interior decoration, of plastic paints which produce both texture and tone, of colored stucco for exterior finishes, puts correct period wall-surfaces within the reach of home-builders with even the most modest purses.

Much of the charm of old villas and cottages in Europe comes from their rough-textured walls. By the use of modern materials, American homes can be made to have all the charm of these old world dwellings, and thus a higher artistic standard of home-building and decorating can be attained.

It is for this reason that rough-textured walls will become a permanent form of decoration and not just a mere fad. This series of articles aims, by describing the textures characteristic of the various periods and telling how they may be produced, to bring these finishes within the reach of the average home-builder as well as the wealthy.

This Teaches Us

President Coolidge, whose literary taste is excellent, said at a White House luncheon:

"I mistrust best sellers, the authors whose names are household words, and whose bank accounts never descend below four figures.

"Look at Poe and Whitman. They stand out above all their contemporaries today, yet Whitman lived in a little wooden shanty in Camden, while Poe lived in a little wooden shanty in Fordham, and they were both behind-hand with the rent.

"This teaches us that genius will out. Even during the genius' life it will out—at the elbows."

South African Diamonds

The production of diamonds in South Africa in 1922 was 2,053,095 metric karats, which was the largest since 1920 and comparable to that of any year since the immediate pre-war period, 1911 to 1913, when the yearly output surpassed 5,000,000 karats. The value in 1923 was estimated at $31,049,000. Outstanding features were the increase of alluvial compared with mine production and the development of more serious competition from foreign fields, especially those in the Belgian and Portuguese Congo.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

Mrs. McEwing Noggle has issued invitations to a luncheon Friday, June 12, followed by bridge.

Miss Margaret Weldon will entertain Thursday in honor of her guests Misses Persis Wooster, of Cambridge Massachusetts, and Esther Van Allen, of Springfield, Massachusetts.

The spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Rader, of near Circleville, was thrown open Sunday to welcome sixty four guests in honor of their twentieth wedding anniversary.

Summer roses wafted their fragrance throughout the house. The honor table laid with twelve covers was a chef d'oeuvre in artistic decorating, centered by a five-branch, silver candelabra with tall yellow candles sentinelled by single silver candlesticks which also burned at the end of the table, linked to the candelabra with vines of myrtle. The table was further adorned with the bride's cake, adorned with a miniature bride and groom.

In the summer dining room were assembled the remaining fifty guests whose tables were a veritable copy of the honor table. A two course luncheon was served, carrying out the color scheme of yellow and white. The hand painted place cards, daffodils, were unique, bearing the date of their wedding, 1905, in gold letters, which were painted by Margaret Stonerock. Mr. and Mrs. Rader responded very graciously for the many beautiful gifts.

Those assisting in dispensing the hospitalities were Miss Flo List, Mrs. Will Rader, Miss Mary Connor, Mrs. George Shook, Mrs. John Renick, Mrs. James Summers, Mrs. Cleve Rader and Mrs. Earl Rader.

A number of relatives and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Hanley, near Tarlton, Sunday, June 7, to remind Mrs. Hanley's mother, Mrs. W. H. Grove, of her 76th birthday anniversary. All came with well filled baskets and enjoyed the day. In the afternoon ice cream and cake were served. Those present were Mrs. W. H. Grove, Hayesville; Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Grove, Ashville; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Grove and daughter, Helen Louise and son, George Richard, and Clave Dumm, of Columbus; Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Dumm and sons, Woodrow and Grover and daughters, Mary, Marie and Elizabeth, of Nash; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wright and sons Lawrence and Julius, Hayesville; Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Frazier and son, Emmett of Ringgold; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Metzger of Columbus; Mr. and Mrs. Alva Hanley and sons, Edward and Ray, Mrs. Nell Welshimer, Tarlton; Helen Dumm, Mary Frazier, Mary Hanley, Mabel Dumm, Agnes Frazier, Hazel Dumm, Mattie Hanley, Ruth Wright, Marvin Dumm, Perry Hartruff, Harry Wright, Homer Hartruff, George Wright and Earl Hanley. The young people enjoyed the afternoon in the shady woods playing games. All left in the evening wishing Mrs. Grove many more happy birthday anniversaries.

New Variety of Apple

By a rare trick of nature there now exists a new variety of apple which has not been given a name. The new variety was accidentally discovered in New Jersey several years ago, when it was found that one tree bore two kinds of apples. The parent tree bears apples of mixed red and green stripes, while the new apple, developed on a single branch, is a deep dark red and has no stripes. Fruit experts studying the new apple declare it to be a most promising variety as well as a big boon to the fruit growers of America. Horticulturists term it the product of a "sport bud." A large nursery company purchased a single branch bearing the new fruit, paying the owner $5,000 for it. Buds from this branch are now being used to develop the new variety, and it is expected to become widely known as one of the leading apples.—Pathfinder Magazine.

New Use for Menthol

An all-American cold cure, based on home-grown menthol, is a possibility held out by the bureau of plant industry of the United States Department of Agriculture. Inasmuch as menthol is now imported at a cost of more than $1,000,000 annually, government botanists point out that menthol-bearing mint plants can be made a profitable crop if properly cultivated in regions where the climate is suitable. Experimental plantings in various parts of the United States in the last year have shown that the mint does not produce a high enough percentage of menthol in southern states, but in the cooler and moister northern states its culture can be made to pay.

CHILDREN BUILD AND RUN CITY

Used to Teach Pupils Art of Government.

Springfield, Mo.—"Tiny Town," the school children's city here, is on exhibition.

This Lilliputian city, built, run and governed by the city manager—commission form of government, and by the school children themselves, is receiving the attention of educators, business men and all interested in youth. It is not a facsimile of a modern city, but just Tiny Town. It is unlike any other city in the country.

Here in Tiny Town the children of Springfield are learning the duties of citizenship, and when they complete their work and future studies they will be able to take an intelligent interest in politics and government. The city's schools have used this plan, in an educational way, to teach the boys and girls how to govern.

Hazel Willert, fourteen years old and an orphan, is mayor of the pigmy city, and Gordon Cummings, fifteen, is the city manager. They were elected recently in a regular "political" campaign with 18 nominees for the office of city manager, mayor and municipal judge. William Newberry wears the star of chief of police of Tiny Town, while Naomi Sherwood sits on the bench as municipal judge. Following the election Hazel and Gordon went to Washington, called upon President Coolidge and invited him to attend the opening of Tiny Town to the public. The President took the matter under consideration.

On a plot of ground, 250 feet by 1,000 feet, in Grant Beach park, is located this town that belongs to the tots of Springfield. There is a community center with its city hall, high school library and chamber of commerce. The walks total 7,500 linear feet.

The blocks are large, enclosing spacious commons that represent play grounds, but which really are intended for working space, so that the repair and care of abutting properties may be carried on from the rear of each lot.

By day and by night faithful patrolmen guard Tiny Town, while a fire fighting brigade is always on watch.

During the 14 days that Tiny Town is on exhibition, there will be afternoon and night programs and concerts featured by the high school orchestra and the boy scout band of 300 pieces. The latter said to be the largest of its kind in the world. Preparations have been made for the entertainment of distinguished visitors.

Hen Fruit Favorite
Victuals for Athletes

Berlin.—The age-old question as to whether a meat or vegetable diet is more beneficial for athletes came up for solution at the recent sport exhibition. The answer is still missing. In an exhaustive investigation active sportsmen insisted they could not get along on an exclusively vegetable diet and that their systems required fairly large quantities of meat. Eggs appeared to be the most popular article of food with a majority of athletes in training.

AMUSEMENTS

Thousands in cattle, but not a cent in the bank—that's the way the Texans found themselves in the days of reconstruction that followed the Civil war. Texas was in a bad way. The only thing it needed to make it boom was a market for its herds and when the news came thru that such a market is to be had way up "north of 36" what a scene there was!

Forty-five hundred cows, sixteen more or less human cow hands, 115 saddle ponies and all the rest, with young Tassie Lockhart, boss of the ranch, at their head hit the trail—a trail that brought them thru Indian territory thru fire and water and after many months to the little Kansas town, if we might call it such, that was to mean their salvation.

We couldn't begin to mention here the trials the sufferings and hardships this little band underwent during the drive. Tho not as well known as the famous trek of the covered wagons westward, this great cattle drive was no less dangerous an adventure.

"The Covered Wagon" is a picture many people thought couldn't be made and "North of 36" a new Irish Will at production for Paramount which opened yesterday at the Met theater, is its twin.

The cast portraying the principal roles is in keeping with the bigness of the story. Jack Holt, Ernest Torrence, Lois Wilson and Noah Beery are featured. Other prominent names appear in support. Emerson Hough, author of the "Wagon," wrote the story.

CIRCUS TIME
CHRISTYS' BIG
SHOW IS HERE

Mammoth Tents and Wild Animals Galore--Street Parade Was Fine.

Christy Brothers big five ring wild animal shows, a Texas product, is here today bringing with it twenty-five car loads of circus equipment and more wild and domestic animals than were ever seen here before with one show. It was as good as a visit to a big city zoo, this morning down in the freight yards when the train was unloaded. Elephants, humped backed sacred cattle, a whole family of them, father, mother and the kids, two water buffalo from India, long horned much like a Texas steer, some real zebras and some not so real, yaks, zebus, five elk, mountain goats, more than fifty ponies, rate little fellows, some so small that the grooms carried them in their arms, a wagon load of dogs of all sizes and breeds all barking at once and making a merry hullabaloo, camels that looked bored, two ostriches and other unknown species.

From the flats were rolled more than thirty cages of wild animals. The show is strong on lions, there are 26 of them, tigers, pumas, leopards, wild boars, bears, hyenas, wolves, monkeys deer and there is also a children's menagerie of fourteen little cages filled with specimens of smaller animals mostly from Mexico and South America.

The Christy show put up this morning the biggest tent ever seen here before. It was more than 400 feet long and 120 feet wide. There are seats for 5,500 people and the performances are given in three rings and two steel arenas.

The surprise of the morning was the spectacular street parade that made its appearance in the business district about noon. In the first place it was much longer than expected and then it gave the vast crowd a splendid chance to see all of the animals.

The presentation of the spectacle of Noah and the Ark this afternoon was a big surprise to the large crowd. It was really a beautiful spectacle with gorgeous wardrobe and drappings, a big chorus and a series of beautiful tableaux, including Daniel in the lion's den and Rock of Ages. The audience applauded loudly at its conclusion. Those who like a show that is different should be out in full force tonight.

DR. THOMPSON

Warns Graduates of Drake Against Danger of Too Much Ego.

Des Moines, Ia., June 8.—The nation turns to college men and women as a bulwark to maintain a stable government, a well ordered society, free institutions and a free state, Dr. W. O. Thompson, president of Ohio State University, told 267 graduates of Drake University today. Dr. Thompson warned the students against the danger of "an inflated ego" and against taking themselves too seriously. He told the graduates it was up to them to answer the popular criticisms that the colleges are flooding the country with graduates intellectually incompetent and that their time was not well spent in college.

In the Silent Night

In the middle of the night father heard in the next room—Roger's room—a little murmur, very soft: "Papa, papa! Mamma!" "That's Roger dreaming," said father to himself. But the murmur continued, still soft and still muffled. "Papa! Mamma! I fell out of bed!" Father got up, went into Roger's room and found him actually on the floor. "Why didn't you cry louder, sonny? I might have been asleep and would not have heard you. You should have shouted and not whispered for papa." "But I didn't want to wake you up," said Roger.—From L'Echo de Paris.

DESPOTIC ACTION
CHANGED HISTORY

When King Forbade Cromwell to Leave England.

A fascinating speculation concerning both American and British history is aroused by memories associated with May day. For it was on that date, 287 years ago, that Charles I of England forcibly prevented a certain trio of English Puritans from following those of their fellows who had already migrated to North America. The significance of the incident is seen in the identity of the three men. They were Arthur Haslerig, John Hampden and Oliver Cromwell.

The Stuart mind was a law unto itself, and we cannot venture to interpret the inner motives which caused that misguided king to insist upon keeping those troublers of his realm at home, instead of letting them go to the colonies, perhaps to forget their grievances in the strenuous work of building up new communities, or perhaps to get scalped by the Indians. Possibly he thought it safer to have them where he could keep his eye upon them. He could scarcely have feared that they would foment rebellion among the mere handful of colonists when settled on these shores. Anyway, he did it; and tremendous were the consequences, an editorial in the Washington Post comments.

For it requires no stretch of the imagination to suppose that with those men out of England, there would have been no Civil War; or, at any rate, none so serious as to upset the throne. We cannot envision Nasby and Marston Moor without the general of the Ironsides. It is certain that the Puritan protest against royal absolutism would have been made, and it might have been effective, but it would have been made through less strenuous and inexorable means. There would probably have been no scaffold in Whitehall, and no protectorate, and the Stuart dynasty might have been maintained even down to our own time.

No less interesting is speculation upon the effect upon America of the coming hither of those great Puritan leaders. Cromwell would almost certainly have become a dominant figure in the politics of New England. And a continuance of undisturbed Stuart sovereignty would have meant a different policy toward the colonies than the varying policies pursued by the Commonwealth, the Restoration, and the reign of William and Anne. What ever had happened we may feel sure that we should not now be commemorating the sesqui-centenary of the beginning of our Revolution. The break might have come earlier, or later, or not at all; but it certainly would not have come just when it did and for the same causes and in the same manner.

On the whole, despite the tragedies which it entailed, that act of Charles I. in keeping Cromwell and his companions in England was probably for the best for both England and America—we might say for all concerned save for Charles himself. To him it was the bitterest irony of fate.

Remarkable Experience

Experience with lightning is described by a Rand (South African) pioneer in a letter to a Johannesburg paper. He says, "Some years ago I was riding a bicycle in the country and was caught in a thunderstorm; in making a Kaffir hut for shelter I was struck by lightning. The flash caught me in the back of the neck, and made a hole there; it then ran all over my body, took one shoe clean off, and burned my clothes to ribbons. The flesh was peeled off my body, and I was unconscious for a long time. The doctor said I could not live through the night, as my injuries were so severe. The drums of my ears are broken, so I am still very deaf, but after careful nursing and six months in bed I got better, and grew a new skin, which I find quite as comfortable as the old one."

Glacier May Yield Dead

Reports from Geneva, Switzerland, are that alpinists are watching the glacier Des Bossons closely this year in the expectation of finding the remains of six men who perished there in September, 1870. One was an American, H. Randall of Chicago, and it is regarded as possible that his body may be among the others which it is hoped will be given up by the "river of ice." Statistics show that the glaciers usually give up their dead within from ten to thirty years, but one case is recorded of a glacier's retaining bodies more than forty years. The hopes of recovering the bodies of the party that met death fifty-five years ago are based upon the recent discovery of an ax belonging to a local guide who met death at that time.

Popular Ailment

A ten-year-old boy developed a rash and was sent to the doctor. The doctor said the malady was not serious or infectious and placed no restrictions on diet or exercise, but advised staying out of school, thinking, apparently, that the boy's appearance might occasion false alarm among teachers and pupils. Much of the "enforced" vacation was spent on a new bicycle. While on an errand to the grocery one afternoon, the "victim" met a schoolmate who inquired as to his absence from school. On hearing the facts, he began to look envious and ejaculated: "See how'd you get it? I wish I had a, too."

WHEN Amos Whiting told Hawkins to give Oscar French something on the Eagle, Oscar did not have the vanity to think it was wholly on account of his own journalistic ability. Oscar's father had been Amos Whiting's closest chum. But Oscar had a knack for writing, and he meant to make good.

"You'll have to take whatever, Hawkins gives you, even if it doesn't happen to suit your taste; then, by and by, you may get something different." "We're swamped with sub reporters already. But if Whiting—see here, you may have 'The Twilight Hour,' Mrs. Starkweather is laid up indefinitely. You give advice to girls, discreet and sensible, but sympathetic. See? Your desk is over there by the window. I'll send you some of Mrs. Starkweather's files so that you can get her drift. Your signature will be 'Prudence Kenworthy.'"

"But—Isn't that a lady's name?" Oscar gasped.

"Of course, and you want to be lady-like and refined, you know. No rough stuff and no slang. You'll soon get the feminine touch."

"Great Caesar!" groaned Oscar French. "I don't want to get a feminine touch. I want a man's job."

Hawkins turned a curt shoulder. "That's all I have for you now. You can take it or leave it."

Young French set his teeth. "I'll take it."

"Oh, you'll like it when you get started, especially when the personal letters come in. But don't try to answer many of them. It's a waste of time."

Young French strode over to the desk by the window and buried himself in Mrs. Starkweather's files. He began his uncongenial task with grim determination, and soon had the satisfaction of feeling that at least he was equal to it. When some waggish reporters left an offering of camellias and maidenhair ferns with a box of chocolates on his desk he placidly dumped the flowers into the wastebasket and ate the candy with ostentatious relish.

Oscar's manly determination to get the feminine touch was a success. He soon out-Prudenced Prudence herself, and the personal letters poured in assuring Miss Kenworthy that she was "better and better every day."

The personal letters! He did enjoy them, though he followed Hawkins' advice and answered few of them. But he did write personally to Georgie Goodale. Georgie wasn't sentimental or whiny, and she had some "pep." She lived in Martinville with her aunt Rachel. Aunt Rachel was a dear, but she wouldn't let Georgie do anything that the other young people did, and she was opposed to Georgie's studying law.

"Dear Miss Kenworthy," Georgie wrote, "your letters are a comfort and an inspiration, too. The twilight hour is the best in my day. But I'd give my new camera for a talk with you face to face. Now you like fishing; you said you did. Back of our cottage is a wonderful trout brook, and Aunt Rachel's luncheons are gorgeous. Can't we make a date?"

Oscar French caught at the idea. He did make a date with Georgie. He laughed at the mirrored image of his fisherman's costume in anticipation of her surprise. He looked forward like a schoolboy to the tete-a-tete and the good fishing and Aunt Rachel's "gorgeous luncheon." But when he actually stood on the platform of Marshallville station he scanned the faces of the women waiting there, half dreading to meet Georgie.

"I have lots of freckles and look like a boy," she had written. He failed to identify the buoyant and vivacious Georgie in the middle-aged and faded-looking group. A lanky, freckled youth encumbered with fishing tackle, was watching the women who alighted from the train.

"I'm looking for Prudence Kenworthy," he announced impersonally. "Hello, Georgie," called a genial employee, who was carrying leather mail-bags.

Oscar faced the freckled youth. "That's one of my names." The freckled youth grinned. "I'm Georgie. The joke's on me," he added magnanimously.

"No, it's on me," French insisted, not to be outdone. "You have the freckles, at any rate. Is there a real trout brook?"

"You bet your life there is! and a cloudy day like this—oh, boy! Come on, partner, and we'll show 'em."

"I'm glad you aren't a lady," Georgie confided to his companion when the wicker baskets were nearly full. "I was beginning to have cold feet."

"So was I," French acknowledged.

"Well, it's time for luncheon, and Aunt Rachel promised to make a peach short-cake. I guess she'll have chicken salad, too."

They tramped across the fields and approached the cottage from the back. "There's Aunt Rachel in the doorway," cried Georgie, who was striding ahead in the narrow path.

Oscar looked over Georgie's shoulder. That union of girlish grace and womanly poise? Why, Aunt Rachel was peaches and cream!

"Luncheon's ready, Georgie," she called and vanished.

Georgie waved his guest up the broad, low stone steps. Oscar French drew in the fragrance of hot coffee and short-cake and, passing through the low vine-wreathed doorway, he followed Aunt Rachel like home.

Royal "Stuarts"

Stuart Stewart or Stuart coming from the word steward, is the name of a royal family of Scotland, later transferred to England. Its progenitor was a Norman baron, Alan, whose grandsons went over to Scotland, where one of them was made high steward to David I, the king. Various lands were conferred upon him in appreciation of his services, among them Paisley, where the shaws used to be made and where he built a monastery. His grandson was third steward, and so on down to the sixth steward, who wedded the daughter of Robert Bruce, the son of this couple ascending to the throne of Scotland in 1370. It was Mary, queen of tragic memory, who was the first to spell the name Stuart.

AMUSEMENTS

Thousands in cattle, but not a cent in the bank—that's the way the Texans found themselves in the days of reconstruction that followed the Civil war. Texas was in a bad way. The only thing it needed to make it boom was a market for its herds and when the news came thru that such a market is to be had way up "north of 36" what a scene there was!

Forty-five hundred cows, sixteen more or less human cow hands, 115 saddle ponies and all the rest, with young Tassie Lockhart, boss of the ranch, at their head hit the trail—a trail that brought them thru Indian territory thru fire and water and after many months to the little Kansas town, if we might call it such, that was to mean their salvation.

We couldn't begin to mention here the trials the sufferings and hardships this little band underwent during the drive. Tho not as well known as the famous trek of the covered wagons westward, this great cattle drive was no less dangerous an adventure.

"The Covered Wagon" is a picture many people thought couldn't be made and "North of 36" a new Irving Wil lat production for Paramount which opened yesterday at the Met theater, is its twin.

The cast portraying the principal roles is in keeping with the bigness of the story. Jack Holt, Ernest Torrence, Lois Wilson and Noah Beery are featured. Other prominent names appear in support. Emerson Hough, author of the "Wagon," wrote the story.

CHRISTYS' BIG
SHOW IS HERE

Mammoth Tents and Wild Animals Galore—Street Parade Was Fine.

Christy Brothers big five ring wild animal shows, a Texas product, is here today bringing with it twenty-five car loads of circus equipment and more wild and domestic animals than were ever seen here before with one show. It was as good as a visit to a big city zoo, this morning down in the freight yards when the train was unloaded. Elephants, humped backed sacred cattle, a whole family of them, father, mother and the kids, two water buffalo from India, long horned much like a Texas steer, some real zebras and some not so real, yaks, zebus, five elk, mountain goats, more than fifty ponies, cute little fellows, some so small that the grownups carried them in their arms, a wagon load of dogs of all sizes and breeds all barking at once and making a merry hullabaloo, camels that looked bored, two ostriches and other unknown species.

From the flats were rolled more than thirty cages of wild animals. The show is strong on lions, there are 26 of them, tigers, pumas, leopards wild boars, bears, hyenas, wolves, monkeys deer and there is also a children's menagerie of fourteen little cages filled with specimens of smaller animals mostly from Mexico and South America.

The Christy show put up this morning the biggest tent ever seen here before. It was more than 400 feet long and 120 feet wide. There are seats for 5,500 people and the performances are given in three rings and two steel arenas.

The surprise of the morning was the spectacular street parade that made its appearance in the business district about noon. In the first place it was much longer than expected and then it gave the vast crowd a solid chance to see all of the animals. The presentation of the spectacle of Noah and the Ark this afternoon was a big surprise to the large crowd. It was really a beautiful spectacle with gorgeous wardrobe and drappings, a big chorus and a series of beautiful tableaux, including Daniel in the lion's den and Rock of Ages. The audience applauded loudly at its conclusion. Those who like a show that is different should be out in full force tonight.

Much Ego.

Des Moines, Ia., June 8.—The nation turns to college men and women as a bulwark to maintain a stable government, a well ordered society, free institutions and a free state, Dr. W. O. Thompson, president of Ohio State University, told 267 graduates of Drake University today.

Dr. Thompson warned the students against the danger of "an inflated ego" and against taking themselves too seriously. He told the graduates it was up to them to answer the popular criticisms that the colleges are flooding the country with graduates intellectually incompetent and that their time was not well spent in college.

"PRUDENCE"

By FLORENCE MELLISH

WHEN Amos Whiting told Hawkins to give Oscar French something on the Eagle, Oscar did not have the vanity to think it was wholly on account of his own journalistic ability. Oscar's father had been Amos Whiting's closest chum. But Oscar had a knack for writing, and he meant to make good.

"You'll have to take whatever, Hawkins gives you, even if it doesn't happen to suit your taste; then, by and by, you may get something different."
"We're swamped with sub reporters already. But if Whiting—see here, you may have 'The Twilight Hour' Mrs. Starkweather is laid up indefinitely. You give advice to girls, discreet and sensible, but sympathetic. See? Your desk is over there by the window. I'll send you some of Mrs. Starkweather's files so that you can get her drift. Your signature will be 'Prudence Kenworthy.'"

"But—Isn't that a lady's name?" Oscar gasped.

"Of course, and you want to be lady-like and refined, you know. No rough stuff and no slang. You'll soon get the feminine touch."

"Great Caesar!" groaned Oscar French. "I don't want to get a feminine touch. I want a man's job."

Hawkins turned a curt shoulder. "That's all I have for you now. You can take it or leave it."

Young French set his teeth. "I'll take it."

"Oh, you'll like it when you get started, especially when the personal letters come in. But don't try to answer many of them. It's a waste of time."

Young French strode over to the desk by the window and buried himself in Mrs. Starkweather's files. He began his uncongenial task with grim determination, and soon had the satisfaction of feeling that at least he was equal to it. When some waggy reporter left an offering of camellias and maidenhair ferns with a box of chocolates on his desk he placidly dumped the flowers into the wastebasket and ate the candy with ostentatious relish.

Oscar's manly determination to get the feminine touch was a success. He soon out-Prudenced Prudence herself, and the personal letters poured in assuring Miss Kenworthy that she was "better and better every day."

The personal letters! He did enjoy them, though he followed Hawkins' advice and answered few of them. But he did write personally to George Goodale. George wasn't sentimental or whiny, and she had some "pep." She lived in Martinville with her aunt Rachael. Aunt Rachael was a dear, but she wouldn't let George do anything that the other young people did, and she was opposed to George's studying law.

"Dear Miss Kenworthy," George wrote, "your letters are a comfort and an inspiration, too. The twilight hour is the best in my day. But I'd give my new camera for a talk with you face to face. Now you like fishing; you said you did. Back of our cottage is a wonderful trout brook, and Aunt Rachel's luncheons are gorgeous. Can't we make a date?"

Oscar French caught at the idea. He did make a date with George. He laughed at the mirrored image of his fisherman's costume in anticipation of her surprise. He looked forward like a schoolboy to the tete-a-tete and the good fishing and Aunt Rachel's "gorgeous luncheon." But when he actually stood on the platform of Marshville station he scanned the faces of the women waiting there, half dreading to meet George.

"I have lots of freckles and look like a boy," she had written. He failed to identify the buoyant and vivacious George in the middle-aged and jaded-looking group. A lanky, freckled youth encumbered with fishing tackle, was watching the women who alighted from the train.

"I'm looking for Prudence Kenworthy," he announced impersonally. "Hello, George," called a genial employee, who was carrying leather mail-bags.

Oscar faced the freckled youth. "That's one of my names."
The freckled youth grinned. "I'm George. The joke's on me," he added magnanimously.

"No, it's on me," French insisted, not to be outdone. "You have the freckles, at any rate. Is there a real trout brook?"

"You bet your life there is! and a cloudy day like this—oh, boy! Come on, partner, and we'll show 'em."

"I'm glad you aren't a lady," George confided to his companion when the wicker baskets were nearly full. "I was beginning to have cold feet."

"So was I," French acknowledged. "Well, it's time for luncheon, and Aunt Rachel promised to make a peach short-cake. I guess she'll have chicken salad, too."

They tramped across the fields and approached the cottage from the back. "There's Aunt Rachel in the doorway," cried George, who was striding ahead in the narrow path.

Oscar looked over George's shoulder. That union of girlish grace and womanly poise? Why, Aunt Rachel was peaches and cream!

"Luncheon's ready, George," she called and vanished.

George waved his guest up the broad, low stone steps. Oscar French drew in the fragrance of hot coffee and short-cake and, passing through the low vine-wreathed doorway, he followed Aunt Rachel like a sheep.

Royal "Stuarts."

Stuart Stewart or Steuart coming from the word steward, is the name of a royal family of Scotland, later transferred to England. Its progenitor was a Norman baron, Alan, whose grandsons went over to Scotland, where one of them was made high steward to David I, the king. Various lands were conferred upon him in appreciation of his services, among them Paisley, where the shawls used to be made and where he built a monastery. His grandson was third steward, and so on down to the sixth steward, who wedded the daughter of Robert Bruce, the son of this couple ascending to the throne of Scotland in 1370. It was Mary, queen of tragic memory, who was the first to spell the name Stuart.

MARBLE GROWS, IS SHOWN BY TESTS

Contraction Is Less Constant Than Expansion.

Washington.—Marble buildings of the United States are growing.

This remarkable fact has been disclosed by a survey of thermal expansion of stone conducted by the United States bureau of standards.

"Marble, especially, shows peculiarities in its behavior under temperature changes," the announcement said. "It expands on heating, but when cooled to the original temperature it does not shrink to its original dimensions; that is, it retains a part of the expansion as a permanent growth."

"Specimens have been measured under low temperature and found to expand when cooled below normal, which, also, is contrary to the usual conception."

These queer characteristics of the action of stone, even under changes of heat caused by summer and winter, are held accountable for the peculiar instances of warping, which are sometimes noted in marble headstones in cemeteries.

The assumption has been, it was said, that stone expands at a uniform rate in all intermediate temperatures, these deductions being based on a limited number of observations. The present data was termed misleading.

Determinations at the bureau of standards, at which frequent length measurements were made on limestone and marble specimens as the temperatures were raised, indicated that these old assumptions are far from correct.

"For small increases in temperature above normal the expansion is very small, but the rate increases rapidly as the temperature rises," officials declared.

"At 100 degrees centigrade the average expansion of marble is about the same as that of steel, but at 200 degrees the rate is approximately doubled, while for temperatures a few degrees above normal expansion is only a fractional part of that of steel."

Hot Ocean Current Brings Death to Birds and Fish

New York.—Strange changes in ocean currents along the west coast of South America have caused thousands of fish and sea birds to be killed and desert lands to be converted into tropical jungles by torrential rains.

The phenomenon, as reported by Capt. George S. Dexter of the Santa Luisa, is described as follows:

"On my voyage I was surprised to find a warm current, instead of cold, flowing southward, the temperature of the water being as high as 75 degrees."

"When we passed the Chincha Islands, off the Peruvian coast, which are the homes for millions of sea birds, I was surprised to see only hundreds of birds in the air where formerly there were myriads. In addition to this, the water was full of dead birds."

"The warm current caused torrential rains in northern Peru and Ecuador. Whole villages were washed away, and there are three new rivers at Talara, Peru, ordinarily a desert, one of which is 17 feet deep. At Talara foliage has sprung up on all sides. Old residents of the west coast say that the same phenomena of the warm current, the tremendous loss in bird life and the torrential rains occurred in 1891."

Washington Keeps Tight Hold on Helium Supply

Washington.—The bureau of mines, under an act passed in the last congress, will take over from the navy, about July 1, the production of helium, the gas used in inflating the giant dirigibles Los Angeles and Shenandoah.

No appreciable quantity of helium is being exported now, and the new law provides that export applications must be made to the secretary of the interior and permission obtained from the President, on the joint recommendation of the secretaries of war, navy and interior.

This provision was put into the law to permit future American transoceanic air lines to have a supply of helium on hand at their foreign terminals.

Officials of the bureau are careful to point out that the new bar against helium exportation will not militate against foreign scientists who desire a small quantity of the gas for their laboratories.

Works for 15 Years on an Inlaid Table

Washington, Pa.—After working for fifteen years on an inlaid table, R. B. Campbell, a local carpenter foreman, has at last completed what he believes to be the finest and most unusual table of its kind in this country.

The top of the table is 32 by 36 inches and contains 10,082 pieces of wood of various sizes, colors and varieties. No two are alike, and Campbell says no two came from the same kind of tree.

All varieties of wood found in the United States, Canada and Mexico are represented in the table, and hundreds of specimens from all the countries of South America, Australia, Asia, Africa and Europe.

The middle block of the table measures 14 square inches and contains 400 small pieces of wood.

Ship 6,000 Miles Out Claims Sending Record

New York.—A long-distance record for radio transmission from a vessel at sea was claimed for the 1,500-watt continuous-wave transmitter of the liner Belgenland, when the vessel returned to New York from a round-the-world voyage. Thomas R. Walker, ship's radio operator, reported that he exchanged messages with San Francisco on January 27, when the Belgenland was at Shanghai, 6,000 miles away. Communication was maintained with San Francisco all the way from Shanghai to Hongkong, he said.

THE LITTLE SPHINX

By PAULINE BIXBY

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

JIM DORIAN fell in love with Janet at the Lindsey's party. She was such a refreshingly demure creature, and her shy, approving smile was comforting to Jim's vanity.

Many charming maidens had believed Jim's words of love, to their later disappointment. Often Jim's affairs ended in bitter quarrelling, following the discovery of his deceit. So, when he met little Janet Appleby Jim smiled in relieved anticipation of her trusting nature.

He intended to be true to Janet, for as weeks passed into months, as he still sought her company, he was certain that this, indeed, was the true love of his lifetime. Janet so exactly suited his requirement of a wife-to-be. Her home-loving nature, the domestic tasks that pleased her, her amenable listening to his long tales of business achievement—all this Jim accepted gratefully. Then too, it was pleasant to fancy her always before his home fire—neat, sweet and gracious. He became a regular visitor at the small family home, where Janet lived with her father and aunt—her surviving relatives—and he grew to know exactly what his loved one might be doing at regular hours of the day; so systematic was the careful Janet. Even the friends who loved her were assigned their respective hours of companionship. She called on the Lindsey's on Tuesday afternoons; usually the Trainors on Wednesday evenings, when Jim was supposed to be busy.

After the evening meal Jim knew that Janet would remove and wash the dinner dishes. He could fancy her light step about the kitchen; after that she might sit for awhile with the evening paper, or bend over her embroidery. Sometimes her father, weary from his day's work, would listen restfully in the fireside chair, while softly she played to him. Then, at ten or later, if Jim were there, Janet would begin to prepare things for the following morning, and so to rest. Before dinner she was apt to be about the neighborhood buying for the family meals. Jim, waiting her coming upon those occasions when he stopped before dinner, would look up in admiring possession when Janet, pretty, glowing from the outer air, smiled down upon him in his chair, her welcome. An admirable wife-to-be, surely.

Jim still managed a Wednesday evening frequently with a gay little dancing companion. Jim, with long-practiced skill, kept his flirtations secret. Sometimes he would glance apprehensively into Janet's blue eyes after a night at the theater with one of his favored acquaintances, but the wide eyes of Janet revealed no disquiet.

It was Fran Bevis who dared him to walk past Janet's home on the way to the dance one night. Fran, who had long been one of the gay crowd with which Jim mingled. Fran knew of Janet, though the two had never met. Jim saw to it that his beloved did not come to know the jolly bunch who so often engaged his time. He was annoyed that Fran should taunt him to this dare. If by chance Janet might come to the street door—well, it would be confusing to have to explain away that pressing business engagement—the presence of Fran at his side. But, after all, did he not know the hours of his fiancée's day? Nine o'clock, at the piano, perhaps her father near by; or, bending over book, or mending.

"Come on," laughed Jim, "are you afraid that you will lose me at Janet's door?" It was still with a sensation of relief that he heard as the party approached the music of Janet's piano—the same dear old love song. Yes, Janet was there; he could see the gleam of her hair beneath the light. At about the same moment he became aware of a manly figure seated close to his fiancée on the piano bench; Jim heard the words of his favorite song in an admirable tenor. Unconsciously he stood still and stared. Fran's laugh aroused him.

"Well," she exclaimed, "there is a picture for you, Jim Dorian. Your best girl has captured the best young man in town. We have all had our eyes on him from the moment he arrived. He is Mrs. Lindsey's brother, and came on from New York to take a law partnership with her husband. I don't know whether there has been anything serious between you and your Janet, but I haven't missed seeing the handsome Bob Cary and Miss Janet together for many evenings past. She does the family food shopping, apparently, and the New York law man dutifully carries the bundles home for her. When you are at the house he does not show up, does he? Miss Sphinx evidently gives him his cue."

The street door opened, but Janet, oblivious to passersby, was merely dismissing the strange young man. "Yes, I will be at home tomorrow night, Mr. Gary," she said demurely. Jim promptly handed Fran over into the care of the "jolly bunch," and strode into Janet's cozy living room. "Tomorrow night," exclaimed the indignant Jim—"I guess not, Janet; that's my night."

She shook her head gently, but positively. "Nor any other night yours. Jim, from now on. I, too, you see, take the privilege of making other engagements."

"But," cried the astonished Jim, "you never said a word about my going around with other people."

"I thought a lot," said Janet, and smiled her sweet smile.

Face Shows Character.

If the face is broad across the forehead, the reasoning ability is excellent, and the further back the ear is from the face the more brain capacity is shown. You will notice in some people that when you look at them sideways the ear seems to be set back so far that it seems to leave only about a third of the head at the back, instead of half. These people will be extremely clever and able to do most things. They have master-minds and much originality.

THE LITTLE SPHINX
By PAULINE BIXBY
(© 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

JIM DORIAN fell in love with Janet at the Lindsey's party. She was such a refreshingly demure creature, and her shy, approving smile was comforting to Jim's vanity.
Many charming maidens had believed Jim's words of love, to their later disappointment. Often Jim's affairs ended in bitter quarreling, following the discovery of his deceit. So, when he met little Janet Appleby Jim smiled in relieved anticipation of her trusting nature.

He intended to be true to Janet, for as weeks passed into months, as he still sought her company, he was certain that this, indeed, was the true love of his lifetime. Janet so exactly suited his requirement of a wife-to-be. Her home-loving nature, the domestic tasks that pleased her, her amenable listening to his long tales of business achievement—all this Jim accepted gratefully. Then too, it was pleasant to fancy her always before his home fire—neat, sweet and gracious. He became a regular visitor at the small family home, where Janet lived with her father and aunt—her surviving relatives—and he grew to know exactly what his loved one might be doing at regular hours of the day; so systematic was the careful Janet. Even the friends who loved her were assigned their respective hours of companionship. She called on the Lindseys on Tuesday afternoons; usually the Trainors on Wednesday evenings, when Jim was supposed to be busy.

After the evening meal Jim knew that Janet would remove and wash the dinner dishes. He could fancy her light step about the kitchen; after that she might sit for awhile with the evening paper, or bend over her embroidery. Comes From the Romans

The expression, "He isn't worth his salt," found its origin in the fact that Roman soldiers were paid in salt rather than with money.

Early Evidences of Possession of Genius

"Most of the men who have been great writers, artists and musicians particularly, have shown signs of the development of their genius rather early in life," say Doctors Walsh and Foote in "Safe-guarding Children's Nerves."

"A recent investigation of the subject has shown, for instance, that out of some sixty of the greatest artists of history more than forty of them, that is more than two out of every three, gave definite proof of their genius before they were fifteen. Almost the same thing is true as regards the poets. Goethe was only seven when his talent became manifest, Victor Hugo was even younger and was called an enfant sublime, like Pope he lisped in numbers and the numbers came; while Alfred de Musset was under fourteen when he wrote his first verse. Of some sixty poets, thirty-eight displayed their talent before twenty. Of twenty-eight novelists twenty-one had revealed something at least of the genius that was in them before they were twenty."

"It is among musicians particularly that very early manifestations of the bent of their genius have been noted. Out of forty musicians, the details of whose lives have been carefully collated with the idea particularly of bringing out how early their talent was revealed, thirty-eight showed a decided taste and actual talent before they were twenty. Curiously enough the greater the genius of the musician, the earlier his genius manifested itself. Mozart, it will be recalled, was only five when he surprised his music-loving family by his musical powers. All the other great musicians of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth centuries followed this rule. Beethoven, for instance, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Schumann, Auber, Weber and Cherubini had all shown very clearly their talent and taste for music before they were twelve years of age."

GROWERS OF VEGETABLES IN MEETING

Pickaway County Soil and Location Right for Early Marketing.

The members of the chamber of commerce and invited guests Tuesday evening listened to one of the best up-to-date meetings pertaining to the growing vegetables that has been held in this city. The idea was to interest farmers in growing vegetables for the markets. It has been suggested that tomatoes, peas, cabbage, sweet corn, asparagus, carrots, celery, herbs spinach, sweet or Irish potatoes, but whatever variety, specialize in that alone, study its traits and try and raise a crop worth having and marketing.

The idea of cooperative marketing after the vegetables have been properly graded and packed, was also suggested as this tends more towards the success of the individual vegetable grower, and protects him from the middle men who as a rule gets his first.

The matter of fertility, what soils were best adapted to the growing of certain vegetables, the time of planting them, and the best way of transporting them to markets were gone into. The fact that The Marion Brothers hot house products is a success, is the fact that they are experienced in the line of raising vegetables and that this county is in a territory that is from two to three weeks earlier than other points of the state. This same firm has also made wonderful strides in the out door raising of vegetables, their specialty being, red tomatoes. This county bids fair to become one of the greatest vegetable growing sections in the state.

Pickaway Plains is the best kind of soil and instead of selling as it does now for $150 to $200 an acre, it will be valued at from $500 to $1,000 an acre.

President Edward Sensenbrenner turned the meeting over to Noah G. Spangler, who talked on the transportation side of shipping vegetables.

Walter Marion, of the Marion Brothers company, gave some inside information relating to the grading, shipping and the cooperative selling and marketing of vegetables.

Other speakers were J. O. Bradfield, general passenger and freight agent and P. F. Thompson, superintendent of the Scioto Valley Traction and Power company; E. C. Rector, president, and Harry Briggs service manager of the Pickaway County Farm bureau. President Sensenbrenner was empowered to appoint a committee of three to make a survey of the situation and also a committee of three to arouse interest in a trip to be made to Marietta on June 29th to attend the Vegetable Growers' convention.

Juvenile Farm Clubs

on Indian Reservation

Washington.—Juvenile agricultural clubs have been organized during the 1925 season on 40 Indian reservations with an enrollment of over 1,200 boys and girls, according to reports received at the Interior department.

The clubs are extensions of the standard county clubs for the white population and are under the supervision of the superintendents, Indian service farmers, matrons, teachers, and returned students at the various Indian agencies. In each case the children finance their own projects and so far sheep, pig, calf, goat, poultry, corn, potato, chili, onion, garden, sewing, canning, and rope clubs have been inaugurated by the youthful Indians.

New Mexico Indian boys and girls have been enlisted in the agricultural clubs. Interesting enterprises among the Zunis are onion and goat clubs. Each member of the onion club has planted 1,000 onions. The formation of the goat club will not be completed until the close of school. A girls' sheep club has also been formed among the Navajo Indians.

Over a hundred Indian boys and girls are enrolled in clubs in Arizona. These are located on the Sells, Salt River, San Carlos, and Pima reservations.

Canada Self-Governing.

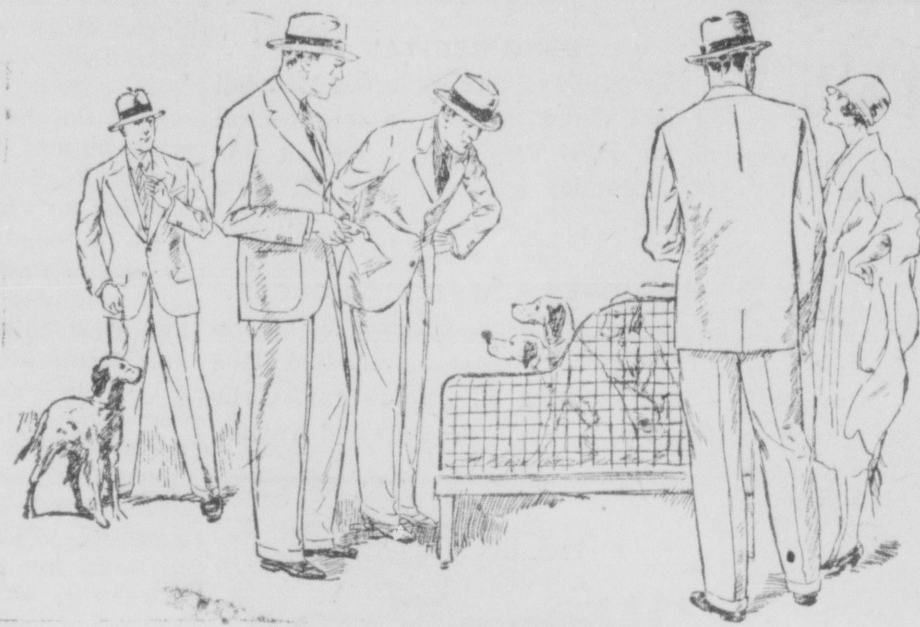

Canada is a self-governing dominion of the British empire. It makes its own laws, has its own law-making bodies and provides for its own defense. The only symbol of British authority is the appointment of the king's representative, the governor general of Canada; his power is limited and almost nominal.

The expression, "He isn't worth his salt," found its origin in the fact that Roman soldiers were paid in salt rather than with money.

Early Evidences of Possession of Genius

"Most of the men who have been great writers, artists and musicians particularly, have shown signs of the development of their genius rather early in life," say Doctors Walsh and Foote in "Safe-guarding Children's Nerves."

"A recent investigation of the subject has shown, for instance, that out of some sixty of the greatest artists of history more than forty of them, that is more than two out of every three, gave definite proof of their genius before they were fifteen. Almost the same thing is true as regards the poets. Goethe was only seven when his talent became manifest. Victor Hugo was even younger and was called an enfant sublime, like Pope he lisped in numbers and the numbers came; while Alfred de Musset was under fourteen when he wrote his first verse. Of some sixty poets, thirty-eight displayed their talent before twenty. Of twenty-eight novelists twenty-one had revealed something at least of the genius that was in them before they were twenty.

CHERRIES! CHERRIES!

There is little fruit for canning; strawberries a short crop; no peaches, few plums or pears; poor prospect for blackberries.

The Buttercup Garden has a fair crop of cherries, curants and gooseberries—enough to fill the first orders that come in.

GROWERS OF VEGETABLES IN MEETING

Pickaway County Soil and Location Right for Early Marketing.

The members of the chamber of commerce and invited guests Tuesday evening listened to one of the best up-to-date meetings pertaining to the growing of vegetables that has been held in this city. The idea was to interest farmers in growing vegetables for the markets. It has been suggested that tomatoes, peas, cabbage, sweet corn, asparagus, carrots, celery, beets, spinach, sweet or Irish potatoes, but whatever variety, specialize in that alone, study its traits and try and raise a crop worth having and marketing.

The idea of cooperative marketing after the vegetables have been properly graded and packed, was also suggested as this tends more towards the success of the individual vegetable grower, and protects him from the middle men who as a rule gets his first.

The matter of fertility, what soils were best adapted to the growing of certain vegetables, the time of planting them, and the best way of transporting them to markets were gone into. The fact that The Marion Brothers hot house products is a success, is the fact that they are experienced in the line of raising vegetables and that this county is in a territory that is from two to three weeks earlier than other points of the state. This same firm has also made wonderful strides in the out door raising of vegetables, their specialty being, red tomatoes. This county bids fair to become one of the greatest vegetable growing sections in the state.

Pickaway Plains is the best kind of soil and instead of selling as it does now for $150 to $200 an acre, it will be valued at from $500 to $1,000 an acre.

President Edward Sensenbrenner turned the meeting over to Noah G. Spangler, who talked on the transportation side of shipping vegetables.

Walter Marion, of the Marion Brothers company, gave some inside information relating to the grading, shipping and the cooperative selling and marketing of vegetables.

Other speakers were J. O. Bradfield, general passenger and freight agent and P. F. Thompson, superintendent of the Scioto Valley Traction and Power company; E. C. Rector, president, and Harry Briggs service manager of the Pickaway County Farm bureau. President Sensenbrenner was empowered to appoint a committee of three to make a survey of the situation and also a committee of three to arouse interest in a trip to be made to Marietta on June 29th to attend the Vegetable Growers' convention.

Juvenile Farm Clubs on Indian Reservation

Washington.—Juvenile agricultural clubs have been organized during the 1925 season on 40 Indian reservations with an enrollment of over 1,200 boys and girls, according to reports received at the Interior department.

The clubs are extensions of the standard county clubs for the white population and are under the supervision of the superintendents, Indian service farmers, matrons, teachers, and returned students at the various Indian agencies. In each case the children finance their own projects and so far sheep, pig, calf, goat, poultry, corn, potato, chili, onion, garden, sewing, canning, and rope clubs have been inaugurated by the youthful Indians.

New Mexico Indian boys and girls have been enlisted in the agricultural clubs. Interesting enterprises among the Zunis are onion and goat clubs. Each member of the onion club has planted 1,000 onions. The formation of the goat club will not be completed until the close of school. A girls' sheep club has also been formed among the Navajo Indians.

Over a hundred Indian boys and girls are enrolled in clubs in Arizona. These are located on the Sells, Salt River, San Carlos, and Pima reservations.

Canada Self-Governing.

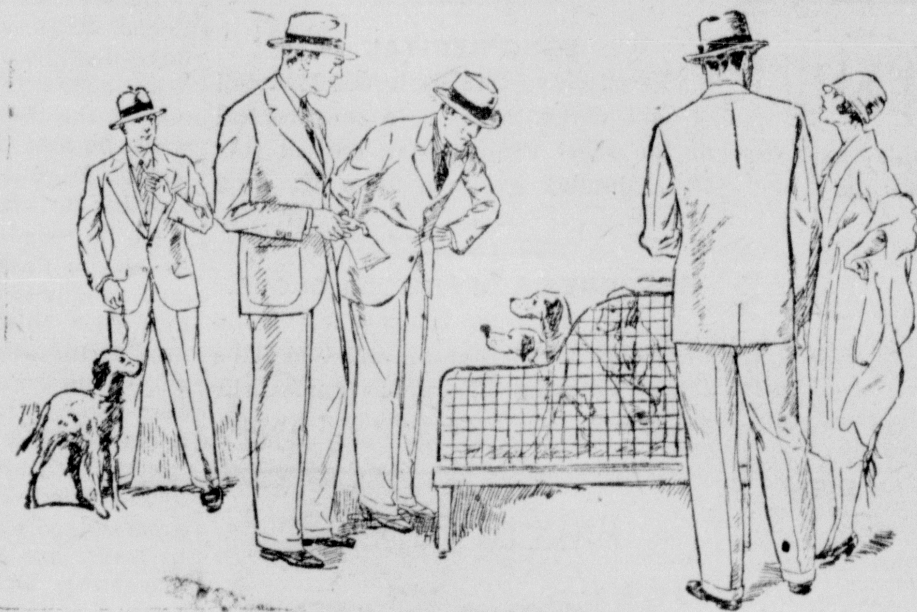

Canada is a self-governing dominion of the British empire. It makes its own laws, has its own law-making bodies and provides for its own defense. The only symbol of British authority is the appointment of the king's representative, the governor general of Canada; his power is limited and almost nominal.
